| Mental health environments need to balance safety and durability with spaces that feel calm, welcoming and less institutional. Communal seating can play an important role in shaping how patients experience and interact with these environments. Designed in association with behavioral health design expert Stephen N. Parker, the Ryno® Blossom Bench offers a softer, more organic alternative to traditional healthcare seating. Inspired by forms found in nature, | its sculptural shape and tactile ripple detailing help create a more therapeutic setting, while flexible configurations allow it to be arranged around planters or grouped in different ways to support a stronger connection with nature. Designed for challenging environments, the Ryno Blossom Bench combines comfort, discreet safety and durable, recyclable construction to support wellbeing and dignity. |  |

The inspiration for the Blossom Bench was derived from nature, with biophilic principles helping to shape the design. Reconfiguring the bench into different flower-petal arrangements allows a variety of social environments to be created, from individual seating to group settings.
